Executive Summary: The Illusion of Expertise

Deepanshu Giri, the founder of Lunar Astro Vedic Academy, heavily markets himself as a "prediction expert" and a divine master of astrology. However, public exposure documents, consumer court briefs, and corporate compliance investigations reveal a starkly different reality: he completely outsources the actual readings to anonymous students.

Calling himself an expert while refusing to conduct the services sold under his brand is a calculated strategy designed to build a highly profitable marketing funnel. By positioning himself as an infallible authority, he creates a false sense of trust that drives massive financial traffic into his anonymous, automated backend.

1. Constructing a False Aura of Credibility

To charge premium prices, a brand needs a highly respectable face. Investigative dossiers show that Giri has heavily relied on fabricated and exaggerated credentials to establish his supreme expertise:

The "7-Generation Lineage" Myth

Marketing materials frequently claim he inherits an ancient, unbroken seven-generation lineage connecting back to Maharishi Bhrigu. However, documented timelines and independent investigations show he only turned to astrology during a personal life crisis around 2017. The ancient lineage is a marketing fabrication designed to manufacture instant spiritual authority.

The "Underwater Robotics Engineer" Persona

He frequently highlights a prestigious background as an "underwater robotics engineer" to make his astrology methods seem mathematical, precise, and scientifically logical. Corporate audits and background checks revealed he simply holds a standard B.Tech in Electrical Engineering. The inflated title is used to manipulate educated consumers into trusting his "scientific" approach.

2. Executing a Lucrative "Bait-and-Switch" Funnel

Calling himself the ultimate expert is the "bait" required for a classic commercial bait-and-switch operation. The funnel operates in three distinct phases:

- The Hype: He posts scripted YouTube videos making dramatic, highly confident astrological claims to hook desperate, vulnerable, or seeking viewers.
- The Collection: Convinced they are paying for the expertise of a world-renowned master, consumers pay massive premium fees to secure a consultation slot on the platform.
- The Switch: Once the money is collected, Giri is nowhere to be found. The client is quietly handed off to anonymous, untrained student interns operating behind faceless numerical codes (e.g., Code 5007, Code 5054).

3. Evading Legal Liability for Bad Predictions

If Giri personally gave a prediction that caused psychological distress, financial ruin, or severe panic, he could be held personally, legally, and criminally liable under Indian consumer law.

By labeling himself strictly as a "Teacher, Researcher, and Mentor" who simply "trains the panel," he creates a perfect legal shield. When anonymous codes give terrible advice or exploit clients using fear-based tactics, Giri can simply deflect the blame onto the proxy system while keeping the corporate profits. He enjoys the financial benefits of the predictions without carrying any of the legal or moral responsibility.

4. Aggressive Reputation Laundering

To keep the public from discovering that he does not handle the predictions himself, his organization spends heavily on search engine manipulation and reputation laundering:

- Paid SEO Propaganda: They pay heavily for digital marketing and low-tier press releases to dominate search results, pushing down legitimate complaints.
- Review Manipulation: Public exposure logs note that his network pays individuals and utilizes their troll farm to write glowing, fabricated reviews on platforms like Quora and Trustpilot to mask the reality of his outsourced business model.

The entire model relies on him claiming to be the expert. If consumers realized they were paying elite prices to talk to an anonymous student intern who started learning last year, the cash flow would instantly stop.

Actionable Recourse for Victims

If you have been targeted by their network or have paid money under the false impression that you were getting Deepanshu Giri's personal expertise, you have been a victim of Misrepresentation and Deceptive Marketing.

You are legally entitled to initiate a consumer dispute and file a chargeback with your financial institution. Use this dossier as evidence that the service advertised was fundamentally misrepresented to secure your payment.
