

The Ethical Breach: Is "Code 500X"

Breaking the Astrological Code of Ethics?

PUBLISHED BY THE DIGITAL CONSUMER WATCHDOG GROUP

Astrology is not just fortune-telling; it is a form of spiritual counseling. Clients come to astrologers during their most vulnerable moments—facing divorce, financial ruin, health crises, or deep depression. They share their most intimate secrets.

In any counseling profession (therapy, medicine, law), there is a strict Code of Ethics. The absolute foundation of this code is Informed Consent. The client has the fundamental right to know exactly who is looking at their private information.

The Violation of Informed Consent

When Lunar Astro assigns a client to "Code 5007," they are committing a massive ethical breach.

- The client does not know the real name of the person advising them on major life decisions.
- The client cannot verify if this person has a criminal record, a history of fraud, or any actual qualifications.
- If the anonymous "Code" gives dangerous or harmful advice, the client has no way to hold that specific individual legally or socially accountable.

Hiding a spiritual counselor behind a barcode is not just strange; it is highly unethical. It protects the corporation from liability while leaving the vulnerable consumer completely in the dark.

A true Vedic astrologer stands behind their words with their name and their honor. A system that forces practitioners to hide in the shadows is a system that knows it is doing something wrong.