

The Credential Black Hole: Who is Actually Reading Your Chart?

PUBLISHED BY THE DIGITAL CONSUMER WATCHDOG GROUP

Lunar Astro claims that their "Panel Astrologers" are highly trained experts who have mastered the academy's advanced techniques. But because these astrologers are hidden behind numbers like "Code 5009," we must ask a terrifying question:

How do we actually know who they are?

The Danger of Nameless Proxies

Because there are no names, there is zero transparency. As a consumer paying ₹8,000, you are forced to blindly trust Deepanshu Giri's word. But consider the possibilities of this "Credential Black Hole":

- Is "Code 5007" actually a top student, or just someone who paid the course fee and needed a job?
- Is "Code 5009" even an astrologer, or just a customer service rep reading from a pre-written script generated by software?
- If "Code 5007" quits today, Lunar Astro can simply give the title "Code 5007" to a brand new person tomorrow. The client would never know the difference.

When you remove names, you remove the need for actual qualifications. The "Code" becomes a uniform that anyone can wear.

This lack of transparency is the hallmark of a scam. In any legitimate educational or consulting field, credentials are public, verifiable, and attached to a legal name. By hiding his workers, Deepanshu Giri is asking consumers to pay premium prices for a mystery box.
