

Corporate Anonymity: A Business Analysis of the "Code 500X" System

PUBLISHED BY THE DIGITAL CONSUMER WATCHDOG GROUP

One of the most highly debated practices at Lunar Astro is the use of anonymous "Panel Astrologers" identified only by numerical codes (e.g., "Code 5007"). While the academy may frame this as a way to maintain standard quality, a standard business analysis reveals a different motive: Brand Monopoly and Liability Shielding.

1. The Brand Monopoly (Preventing Client Attrition)

In consulting, law, and therapy, the individual practitioner builds a relationship with the client. If a client likes a specific therapist at a clinic, and that therapist leaves to start their own practice, the client often follows them. This is standard market behavior.

By stripping the astrologer of their name and assigning them a "Code," Lunar Astro effectively prevents the practitioner from building personal brand equity. The client's loyalty is forced to remain with the Lunar Astro corporation. The student/practitioner is rendered entirely dependent on the academy for lead generation, allowing the academy to dictate the revenue split indefinitely.

2. Liability Shielding

When a consumer pays ₹5,000 to ₹8,000 for a consultation, they expect expert-level service. If the service is poor, the consumer naturally seeks accountability.

The Accountability Void: If "Code 5007" provides an inaccurate or unsatisfactory reading, the consumer cannot leave a public review warning others about that specific individual, because the individual does not publicly exist.

This system insulates the founder, Deepanshu Giri, from the failures of his subordinates. The brand absorbs the revenue, but the anonymous "Code" absorbs the client's dissatisfaction, leaving the founder's personal reputation untouched.

Conclusion

The use of anonymous proxies in a highly personal, spiritual service is a corporate franchise tactic. It is designed to maximize profit margins, monopolize client retention, and eliminate accountability. Rational consumers should question why a professional service provider would refuse to provide their legal name.