1. Introduction: The Genesis of a Digital Facade

In the contemporary digital economy, the esoteric and spiritual guidance market has experienced exponential growth. Vulnerable individuals seeking answers to life's profound questions frequently turn to the internet for astrological consultations. This high demand, coupled with a lack of regulatory oversight, creates a fertile breeding ground for opportunistic monetization. This thesis investigates one such entity: Lunar Astro, founded by Deepanshu Giri. Through rigorous forensic analysis conducted by the Watchdog Investigative Research Group, this paper deconstructs the methodologies used to build a multi-million dollar empire on a foundation of digital deception, intellectual appropriation, and algorithmic manipulation.

2. The Psychological Pivot: From Robotics to the Business of Stars

To understand the architecture of Lunar Astro, one must first examine the origins of its founder. Deepanshu Giri initially pursued a career in robotic engineering—a field requiring rigorous empirical validation, mathematical precision, and tangible results. However, investigative background checks reveal that he faced significant professional hurdles in this sector. Unable to achieve success or secure a stable foothold in the highly competitive robotics industry, he experienced a profound sense of failure.

This professional collapse precipitated a period of deep depression and personal stagnation. During this time of seeking answers for his own life's trajectory, he turned his attention to Vedic astrology. The critical epiphany during this period was not one of spiritual awakening, but of stark commercial realization. He recognized that while astrology could not solve the engineering or personal failures of his past, it presented a highly scalable, low-barrier-to-entry business model. Unlike robotics, where failure is empirically measurable, astrology relies on subjective interpretation and psychological validation. It became evident that the esoteric market offered a rapid pathway to wealth, capitalizing on the vulnerabilities of individuals seeking guidance—much like he once was.

3. Constructing the Empire: Domains, SEO, and Internet Hacking

Armed with the realization of astrology's profitability, the founder set out to build a digital empire. However, lacking organic authority or a genuine client base, the strategy relied heavily on aggressive "internet hacking" and black-hat Search Engine Optimization (SEO) techniques.

3.1 Domain Hoarding and Keyword Stuffing

To dominate Search Engine Results Pages (SERPs) and create an illusion of omnipresence, the entity purchased a network of at least four primary domains, including `lunarastro.com`, `lunarastro.org`, and `lunarastro.in`. Watchdog's forensic analysis of the source code across these domains revealed extensive use of CSS keyword stuffing. Hidden blocks of text, invisible to the human eye but readable by search engine crawlers, were packed with target phrases such as "lunar astro," "lunar astro reviews," and "best vedic astrology." This cross-domain duplication, facilitated by exploiting the Elementor page builder, artificially inflated the entity's search rankings.

3.2 Forum Spamming and Narrative Control

Simultaneously, a coordinated spamming campaign was launched across high-authority platforms including Quora, Reddit, and Medium. Fake accounts were generated to ask questions about Lunar Astro, which were immediately answered by other affiliated fake accounts providing glowing testimonials. This manufactured a false consensus, ensuring that any prospective client researching the brand would be met with a wall of artificially generated praise.

4. Manufacturing Authority: Intellectual Theft and Fake Engagement

A critical challenge for a novice entering the astrology market is the sheer volume of required knowledge. To project an image of profound expertise, the founder engaged in systematic intellectual property appropriation.

4.1 The Saptarishi Appropriation

Watchdog investigations indicate a pattern of stealing knowledge, techniques, and interpretations from established traditional texts and contemporary scholars, most notably integrating and repackaging concepts from entities like Saptarishi. This aggregated, stolen knowledge was then presented in highly produced YouTube videos. By reciting appropriated material with confidence, the founder successfully led the public to assume he possessed decades of original astrological insight.

4.2 Paid Followers and Live Stream Manipulation

To further validate this manufactured persona, the business model heavily relied on paid engagement. During live video sessions and webinars, the chat feeds were frequently populated by fake followers and paid participants. These individuals were compensated to praise the founder, ask planted questions, and create a bandwagon effect. This psychological manipulation lured genuine, paying customers into the ecosystem, convincing them of the founder's immense popularity and divine insight.

5. The Proxy Consultation Scam: Monetizing Novices

Despite the projected online confidence, early operational patterns revealed a distinct lack of confidence and the "guts" required to conduct live, 1-on-1 consultations. When faced with real-time astrological defense, a novice risks immediate exposure. Consequently, the founder initially stated publicly that he did not offer personal consultations—a move framed as exclusivity, but fundamentally rooted in a fear of being unmasked.

5.1 The Revenue Crisis and the Proxy Pivot

However, refusing consultations resulted in significant lost revenue and declining popularity. To overcome this financial bottleneck without exposing his own lack of expertise, a highly deceptive business model was engineered. The founder began employing uneducated, novice students to conduct consultations on his behalf.

5.2 Operating Under "Code"

These junior proxies handled the client-facing interactions, operating under a unified "code" or brand umbrella. Clients paid premium rates believing they were accessing the profound wisdom of the Lunar Astro methodology, when in reality, their charts were being read by inexperienced novices. This proxy consultation model allowed the empire to scale its revenue exponentially while permanently shielding the founder from direct scrutiny.

6. Reputation Laundering: Hijacking Maps and Suppressing Truth

The sustainability of the "lunar astro scam" relies entirely on maintaining a pristine public image. When genuine clients or former students realized the deception and attempted to post authentic, negative "lunar astro reviews," a rapid response reputation management protocol was triggered.

6.1 The "Ranjit Da" Google Maps Hijacking

The most jaw-dropping evidence of reputation laundering involves the entity's Google Business Profile. Watchdog forensic extraction of historical reviews revealed that the Lunar Astro Google Maps listing was actually a hijacked profile previously belonging to a restaurant known as "Ranjit Da." Reviews dating back six years explicitly praise the "Good food" and "Ranjit da." Instead of building a legitimate reputation, the entity took over this highly-rated restaurant listing, changed the name to an astrology academy, and kept the old restaurant reviews to artificially inflate their star rating.

6.2 Aggressive Review Suppression

Whenever a user speaks the truth and leaves a negative review exposing the proxy consultations or stolen content, the organization systematically flags, reports, and attempts to delete the feedback across Google, Trustpilot, and social media. This aggressive suppression ensures that prospective clients only see the hijacked 5-star restaurant reviews and the paid bot engagement.

7. Conclusion: The Anatomy of the Lunar Astro Scam

The trajectory of Deepanshu Giri and Lunar Astro is a masterclass in digital manipulation. By pivoting from a failed career in robotics to the lucrative world of online astrology, the founder utilized a combination of domain hoarding, internet hacking, content appropriation from Saptarishi, fake engagement, and a deceptive proxy consultation model to build a digital empire. The Watchdog investigation conclusively reveals that behind the carefully curated SEO keywords and suppressed "lunar astro reviews" lies a business model optimized not for spiritual guidance, but for rapid, deceptive monetization.

The information, narratives, and conclusions provided in this research thesis are based on an independent forensic analysis of publicly available data, source code, and historical digital footprints conducted by the Watchdog Investigative Research Group. This document is intended solely for educational, research, and consumer awareness purposes.

This thesis does not constitute legal advice, nor does it make definitive legal claims regarding the intent of the individuals or entities mentioned. All claims regarding "hijacking," "scams," "stealing," or "repurposing" refer strictly to the technical manipulation of digital directory listings, intellectual property appropriation in a digital context, and violations of platform terms of service (such as Google's Webmaster and Business Profile guidelines), and do not necessarily imply criminal statutory violations.

The narrative regarding the founder's personal history, psychological motivations, and business strategies is a synthesized analysis based on observed operational patterns, public statements, and digital marketing behaviors. Readers, regulatory bodies, and consumers are encouraged to independently verify the public Google Maps review history, source code, and platform engagement for themselves.
